The diversity wheel

Adapted from Marilyn Loden

What is inclusion?

Inclusion in governance means ensuring that all board members, stakeholders and community voices, regardless of background, ability, identity or experience, have equitable access to information and decision-making, feel they belong, and share in the organisation's purpose and outcomes

Diversity Council Australia, Inclusion Model, Sydney, DCA, 2025

Why?

- It is the right thing to do!
- Stronger decision-making and problem-solving
- Different perspectives and experiences
- Increased innovation and creativity
- Stronger organisational performance
- Reflects the community
- Attracting and retaining talent
- Equity, inclusion and ethics
- Representation and visibility

The secretary's role in fostering inclusion

Through communication, organisation, and record-keeping, the secretary can:

- Model inclusive and respectful behaviour
- Identify and remove barriers to participation
- Ensure information and processes are accessible
- Advocate for continuous improvement and equity in governance

Breakout

1. How well does your board reflect the community you serve?
2. What inclusive practices are you/your board currently engaging in?
3. What are the biggest barriers your board faces around accessibility and inclusion?

Questions to ask yourself:

What can I do?

What is within my control or influence?

Looking inwards: inclusive foundations

Review internal policies and procedures to embed inclusion and accessibility

Use clear, jargon-free language in all communication

Ensure venues and technology meet access needs

Share meeting papers early and in accessible formats

Support a safe, respectful culture and raise concerns if needed

Keep accurate, respectful records that reflect all contributions

Gather feedback and suggest improvements

Looking outwards: embedding inclusion in board practice

Ensure documents and communications are accessible and inclusive

Advocate for fair and inclusive recruitment of board members

Embed inclusion and equity goals in the strategic plan

Include community voices or lived experience in decision-making

Encourage consultation with diverse community groups

Apply inclusive policies and procedures in governance and community engagement

Psychological safety

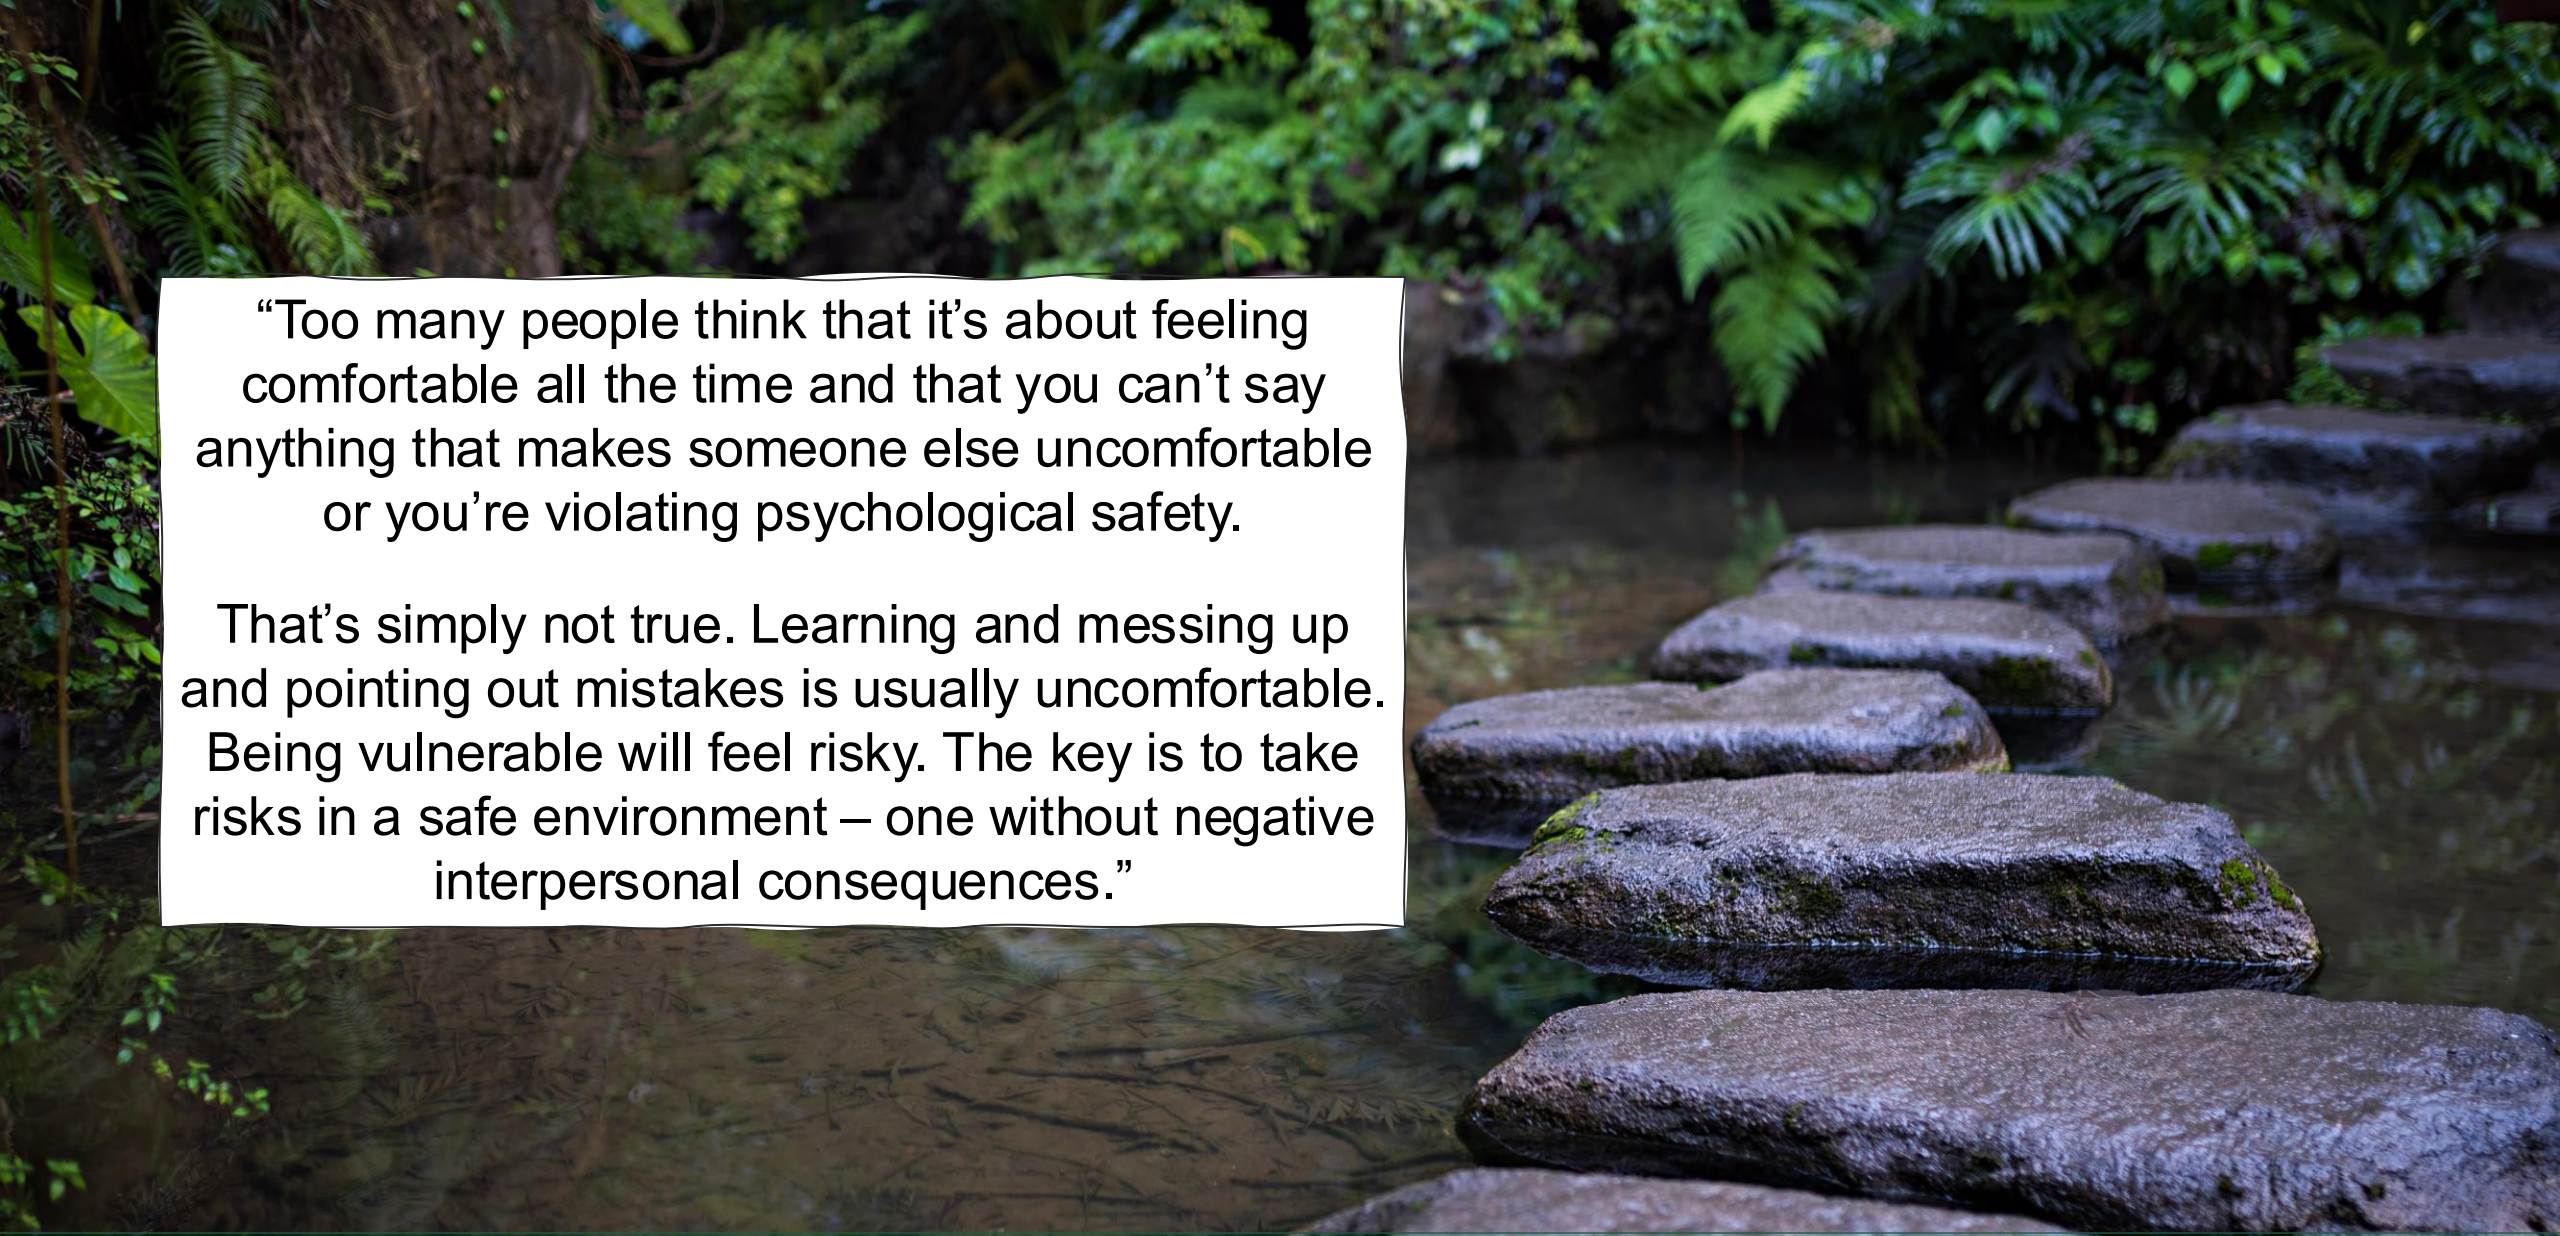

“The belief that one will not be punished or humiliated for speaking up with ideas, questions, concerns, or mistakes, and the team is safe for interpersonal risk taking.”

Dr Amy Edmonson

Indicators of psychological safety

- If you make a mistake on this team, it is not held against you.
- Members of this team can bring up problems and tough issues.
- People on this team sometimes accept others for being different.
- It is safe to take a risk on this team.
- It isn't difficult to ask other members of this team for help.
- No one on this team would deliberately act in a way that undermines my efforts.
- Working with this team, my unique skills and talents are valued and utilised.

How would your board/executive respond?

“Too many people think that it’s about feeling comfortable all the time and that you can’t say anything that makes someone else uncomfortable or you’re violating psychological safety.

That’s simply not true. Learning and messing up and pointing out mistakes is usually uncomfortable. Being vulnerable will feel risky. The key is to take risks in a safe environment – one without negative interpersonal consequences.”

Supporting psychological safety

- Actively invite input
- Show appreciation and humility
- Create warmth and informality
- Model constructive behaviour
- Ask before advocating
- Provide training and resources
- Reward challenges to the status quo
- Use humour and enthusiasm
- Give targeted and specific praise

What is unconscious bias? How can it impact boards?

Examples of unconscious bias

Confirmation bias

The tendency to search for information that confirms our preconceptions

Attribution substitution

Using a simple attribute to make a complex judgment

Affinity bias

The tendency to favour people with similarities to ourself

Illusory correlation bias

Believing a relationship exists between two subjects, when in fact no relationship exists

Availability heuristic

Being influenced by things that come to mind easily

Intuition bias

The tendency to make decisions based on gut feelings rather than evidence or rational thinking

Breakout: Building an inclusive board culture

- What role can the secretary play in creating a psychologically safe board?
- How might unconscious bias show up on a board, and what can the secretary do to help address it?

Creating a healthy induction process

1: Get in contact

2: Create or update a board manual

3: Introductions to board and staff

4: Outline roles and responsibilities

5: Comprehensive, open-ended briefing

6: Provide a site tour

7: Mutual learning exchange

8: Ongoing feedback and improvement

What are the principles of an inclusive induction?

- Personalised: Recognise individual needs and preferences
- Accessible: Provide information in clear, usable formats
- Welcoming: Create psychological safety and belonging
- Collaborative: Two-way learning process
- Continuous: Improve based on feedback

Inclusive beginnings

From first contact through to introductions, ensure every step is inclusive and flexible.

Consider:

- Individual needs
- Accessible communication options
- Board culture and behaviour
- Clear expectations
- The board's roles and responsibilities

Board pack contents

- Board members have a range of legal and ethical responsibilities, and it can be very useful to include some information about these in your board manual

Creating an inclusive board pack

- Include a statement on diversity and inclusion
- Provide accessible versions of key documents
- Add bios, pronouns, and contact details
- Explain accessibility features of meetings and venues

Building connection with new board members

- Support new board members to feel part of the team
- Provide a briefing on current issues and recent decisions
- Offer a tour and/or overview of programs
- Create opportunities for socialising and connection
- Make it a two-way learning exchange

Seek feedback to keep improving the induction experience

Breakout

1. What can you do to advocate for more inclusive governance?
2. How can you influence culture, not just compliance?
3. What actions can you take to address the barriers your board faces around accessibility and inclusion?

What can boards do to be more inclusive?

Building an inclusive and accessible board

Step 1: Lay the groundwork

- Review your policies, structure and practices with an inclusivity lens to make sure nothing unintentionally limits participation or diversity.
- Consider establishing a committee with a clear commitment to equity and inclusion
- Link diversity and inclusion to strategy and set goals for gender and other underrepresented groups

Step 2: Recruit with intention

- Assess existing skills, experience and diversity
- Actively succession plan
- Expand your recruitment pool
- Clearly define roles and expectations
- Follow your governance requirements while also providing members with clear information on nominees and the value they bring to the board

Step 3: Create pathways for participation

- Offer flexible meeting times, hybrid options
- Remove barriers to involvement, regardless of their circumstances
- Provide training and mentoring

Step 4: Welcome and support

- Provide a warm, inclusive induction
- Pair new members with a mentor who understands inclusive leadership
- Offer training and leadership opportunities to support progression into senior roles

Step 5: Build a culture that retains talent

- Foster a respectful, inclusive culture where every voice is valued
- Promote psychological safety
- Actively identify and address instances of bias or exclusion
- Seek feedback and check in regularly to learn how you can keep improving

Reflect and share

- What have you learned?
- What will you apply?
- What do next steps look like?
